Committee on Psychoanalysis in Clinical Social Work

The AAPCSW is a national organization with over 16 chapters throughout the country and is open to all clinical social workers who wish to support our aims and purposes (see page 12 of the Newsletter). Our membership includes private practitioners, social workers in community agencies, psychoanalysts, psychoanalytic psychotherapists, and also professionals, friends, students, and retirees who share our interests. The AAPCSW actively promotes the contributions of psychoanalysis within schools of social work and to the general social work community. This special catalog is intended as a resource guide for our newsletter readers.

Preparing Psychoanalysis for the Millennium
Chartered by NYS Board of Regents
Publisher of The Psychoanalytic Review

NPAP

National Psychological Association for Psychoanalysis

The Westchester Center for the Study of Psychoanalysis and Psychotherapy

WCSPP was chartered in 1974 by the Regents of the University of the State of New York to meeting the training needs of mental health professionals. WCSPP is interdisciplinary, nonhierarchical, and committed to the collaboration between faculty and candidates in the development of curriculum, policies, and a strong educational milieu. The faculty represents a range of contemporary psychoanalytic perspectives. It is committed to a continuing reassessment of psychoanalysis and psychotherapy in the light of new knowledge and developments in the profession. WCSPP is committed to offering financial assistance to candidates in all training programs.

The Psychoanalytic Training Program (four years) is designed to provide candidates with a firm grounding in psychoanalytic theory and practice through courses, supervised psychoanalytic clinical work, and a personal analysis.

The Adult Psychotherapy Training Program (two years) provides candidates with advanced training in psychotherapy through courses and supervised clinical work.

The Child and Adolescent Psychotherapy Program (two years) provides candidates with advanced training in psychotherapy with children, adolescents, and their families through courses and supervised clinical work.

The Psychoanalytic Supervisory Training Program (one year) is designed to develop the skills and theoretical background consistent with supervisory responsibilities.

The Treatment Service of WCSPP provides psychoanalysis and psychoanalytically-oriented psychotherapy for those in the community interested in obtaining such treatment at low cost.

For further information, please contact WCSPP at 260 Stuyvesant Avenue, Rye, NY 10580, phone 914.967.1300, or on the web at www.wcspp.org. An Open House is scheduled for March 15, 2008. We welcome your interest and inquiries.

The National Psychological Association for Psychoanalysis

Writers, professors, social workers, physicians, psychologists, lawyers, artists, philosophers, and others comprise NPAP, one of the oldest and largest nonmedical institutes in the United States. NPAP evolved from pioneering seminars begun in 1948 by Theodor Reik, a student of Sigmund Freud and a seminal voice in psychoanalysis. Mindful of a legacy reaching back to Freud and Theodor Reik's position as a nonmedical analyst, the Institute currently offers comprehensive psychoanalytic training that encompasses a range of theoretical orientations designed to prepare candidates for the professional practice of psychoanalysis. It also honors the principle, made clear by Freud in The Question of Lay Analysis (1926), that psychoanalysis is a profession independent of other training. Chartered by New York State to train candidates with at least a master's degree, NPAP offers a program that is enriching, stimulating and interdisciplinary. NPAP is proud of several distinctive aspects of its training.

- Clinical experience is provided for candidates via referrals from the Theodor Reik Clinical Center for Psychotherapy (TRCC).

- Candidates are eligible to apply for the NYS License in Psychoanalysis after completion of the license-qualifying program.
- Candidates have an active part in the governance of NPAP through the student organization.
- Our democratic, non-hierarchical, and collegial atmosphere offers a stimulating experience that begins with the training process and continues after graduation through membership in the organization and the opportunity to participate in scientific programs, continuing education and study groups.

For further information, call 212.924.7440, e-mail info@npap.org, or see our website www.npap.org. Check out dates for our semi-annual open houses.

The Institute for Psychoanalytic Training and Research

Since its founding more than four decades ago, IPTAR's mission has been to provide rigorous and high-quality psychoanalytic training steeped in classical and contemporary Freudian thought. Our updated and revised curriculum offers course work in object relations theory, narcissistic regulatory processes, child development, ego psychology, and current issues in the "widening scope" of psychoanalysis, as well as classical Freudian theory.

Our mission and orientation are only part of what makes IPTAR a worthwhile and appealing place to attend for advanced training. IPTAR today is a thriving, vibrant institution. In recent years it has developed and added to its roster new training programs: the Child and Adolescent Psychotherapy Training Program, the Socio-Psychoanalytic Training Program in Organizational Development and Consultation, and the Introductory Psychoanalytic Program. We have also created a clinic which delivers low-cost treatment to our surrounding community and which, at the same time, offers candidates the possibility of augmenting their clinical experience while earning an income and receiving free supervision from IPTAR psychoanalysts.

IPTAR's candidates can and do serve on virtually all of IPTAR's committees and all of its governing boards. And the organization as a whole functions as a home where graduates and members can continue throughout their professional lives to engage in learning, sharing of ideas, research, and ongoing commitment to the field of psychoanalysis.

IPTAR has the distinction of being one of the first non-medical institutes to become affiliated with the International Psychoanalytical Association and all graduates of IPTAR's psychoanalytic training are eligible for membership in the IPA.

The Institute for Contemporary Psychotherapy

Four-Year Program in Psychoanalysis and Psychotherapy

The Institute for Contemporary Psychotherapy (ICP) was founded in 1971, and was granted a provisional charter by the Regents of the University of the State of New York in September of 1973. The Institute received its permanent charter on January 8, 1978, and it is presently incorporated as a nonprofit corporation.

The aims of ICP are to provide training in psychoanalysis and psychoanalytic psychotherapy for qualified professionals and to provide, at moderate cost, the full range of psychotherapeutic services and a research setting in which knowledge of the psychotherapeutic process can be advanced.

It is our philosophy that the development of treatment skill and competence can best be carried out in a setting in which the continued personal growth of the therapist is fostered. The program, therefore, emphasizes the development of personal awareness as well as the development of technical skills and theoretical knowledge. Courses are offered from a variety of theoretical and clinical perspectives, including Freud, Sullivan, Object Relations, Dreamwork, Self Psychology, Relational Theory, and Development from infancy to older adults.

In addition to our adult treatment division, there are divisions for the treatment of trauma, children and adolescents, family and couples, persons with eating disorders, older adults, artists, groups, and gay and lesbian affirmative psychotherapy. Candidates have the opportunity to work in these divisions and accrue hours towards the requirement for graduation.

Candidates are assigned patients from the Institute's clinical services which provide psychoanalysis and psychoanalytic psychotherapy for a current population of over 600, a third of them seen more than once a week. Professional treatment staff currently number over 150. In addition, there are over 100 supervisors and faculty members. Considerable attention is given to both the development of a treatment plan and to the suitability of the therapist for the particular patient and problem under consideration.

Two-Year Program in Contemporary Psychodynamic Psychotherapy

ICP's Two-Year Program in Contemporary Psychodynamic Psychotherapy is a convenient evening program designed to provide an intensive learning experience combining course work, individual and group supervision, patient contact, and individual psychoanalytic psychotherapy.

The program starts in September and consists of two semesters of 15 weeks each. Classes meet on Tuesday evenings from 6:00 to 9:15 p.m., with participants attending one clinical course, one theoretical course, and one group supervision course. The course work covers the essential concepts of psychoanalytic psychotherapy with an emphasis on clinical application. Through class work and supervision, participants will be helped to develop their understanding of patients, their capacity for effective therapeutic communication, and their ability for use of self in the treatment setting.

Each student will work with two patients in weekly psychotherapy. Students may be assigned patients from the Institute's clinic and be paid on a fee-per-session basis. Upon approval by their supervisors, students may opt instead to work with patients from private practice or work settings.

Every student will participate in one group and one individual supervision session weekly with a program supervisor. Students are expected to be in psychoanalytic psychotherapy at least once weekly, starting with their first semester.

Graduates are eligible to apply to the four-year analytic program. If accepted, they may receive credit and start in the second year of the four-year program.

In addition to the formal program, students learn by participating in the environment of a vital institute. ICP provides a lecture series, trauma and sexuality workshops, and the opportunity to be part of a professional community.

For further information, please call the Institute in Contemporary Psychotherapy at 212.333.3444.

The Manhattan Institute for Psychoanalysis

The Manhattan Institute for Psychoanalysis offers both an intensive and comprehensive five-year psychoanalytic training program and a one-year psychoanalytic psychotherapy program. Our core theoretical framework is Contemporary Interpersonal and Relational Psychoanalysis.

Candidates and graduates are an integral part of the administrative committee structure and are encouraged to be active participants in shaping policy and in initiating changes.

The Institute sponsors two separate psychotherapy centers: a general referral service designed to help candidates find analytic treatment cases to fulfill Institute requirements and to assist in early development of a practice, and the Trauma Treatment Center, which offers additional educational opportunities and referrals for candidates and graduates who complete the training program.

The Manhattan Institute is interested in candidates who are mature, flexible in their thinking, and committed to professional development as psychoanalysts.

Please call 212.422.1221 to be placed on our mailing list to receive notice of colloquia, our training bulletin, and other information.

 Low-cost individual or group supervision is offered by faculty and graduates for qualified nonmatriculated professionals.*

JOIN THE DIALOGUE

IPSS offers both a four-year psychoanalytic training program and a one-year post-certificate psychoanalytic program with a distinctive emphasis on the systematic study and clinical application of psychoanalytic self psychology and intersubjectivity. Courses are offered in self psychology and intersubjectivity theory as well as classical psychoanalytic, object relations and relational theory. This training program is designed for clinicians interested in psychoanalytic clinical practice and in the further development of theory and research. Course work, supervision and independent study are provided by an internationally distinguished faculty who encourage independent thought.

The Training Institute of the New York Freudian Society

The Training Institute of the New York Freudian Society offers comprehensive training in adult and child psychoanalysis and a program in parent-infant dyadic treatment. The adult psychoanalytic training is also available in Washington, D.C.

Psychoanalytic training seminars begin with a core common to the adult and child programs. This includes an introduction to basic psychoanalytic theory and its historical development from infancy through maturity, the concept of the unconscious, the theory of the drives and narcissistic regulatory processes, the principles of ego psychology and object relations, and the formation of dreams, fantasies and symptoms. Throughout the curriculum, the focus is on the origins, development, and elaboration of psychoanalytic ideas. Continuous case seminars give candidates the opportunity to integrate theory and its clinical application with a broad range of patients.

The Program for the Study of Parent-Infant and Parent-Toddler Relationships and Dyadic Treatment is a three-year program for graduate analysts who study infant research, the application of infant studies to clinical work, and the treatment of infants/toddlers and their primary caretakers.

Our two-year program in psychoanalytic psychotherapy offers a curriculum spanning the life cycle and developmental issues. Coursework and supervision will emphasize clear understanding of technique and its application to clinical practice.

Candidates are served by an effective candidate's organization with representatives on major Society committees and a Consultation Service which actively seeks patient referrals for candidates. Tuition assistance, affordable fees for supervision, and reduced fees for psychoanalysis are available.

The New York Freudian Society is a Component Society of the International Psychoanalytic Association and all graduates qualify for membership in that organization.

The Psychoanalytic Psychotherapy Study Center

The Psychoanalytic Psychotherapy Study Center is dedicated to using multiple theoretical perspectives to provide high-level training in psychoanalysis and psychoanalytic psychotherapy to psychologists, social workers and other qualified mental health practitioners. While the curriculum and study environment are formulated to provide a solid grounding in basic psychoanalytic theory, PPSC operates from the premise that psychoanalytic training is enriched by exposure to all major theoretical orientations. We believe openness to different approaches will greatly facilitate the growth and development of the clinician. The study environment challenges the candidate to compare and integrate significant contributions of all major orientations: Contemporary Freudian Analysis, Modern Psychoanalysis, Object Relations, Self Psychology, Relational, Interpersonal, and Intersubjective Theory.

Our goal is to graduate psychoanalysts and psychotherapists who represent our unique tradition of diversity, recognition and respect for the individual. PPSC's focus is on helping practitioners find a consistent, theoretically based approach that works best for them. Classes, group supervision, personal analysis, individual supervision and an integrated curriculum enable the candidate to accomplish these goals.

PPSC offers a four-year Psychoanalysis Training Program and a three-year Psychoanalytic Psychotherapy Training Program. The four-year program requires more intensive personal analysis and supervision and final year of course work that further compares and integrates theory.

PPSC also offers Continuing Education seminars and an extensive lecture series integrating psychoanalysis and addictions and workshops throughout the year.

In the spirit of what we believe psychoanalysis to be, PPSC is committed to community, curiosity, and collegiality that foster openness to learning from each other.

The New York School for Psychoanalytic Psychotherapy and Psychoanalysis

NYSPP recognizes that psychoanalytic psychotherapy is a distinct professional discipline within the mental health field and requires its own rigorous training. The school's training program is based on contemporary theory which integrates the perspective of psychosexual development and ego psychology with the contributions of object relations, conflict theory, and self-psychology. This blend of proven, contemporary theory provides a dynamic and clear understanding of the human mind. Graduates complete their training with the skills necessary to evaluate and treat a wide range of patient problems.

NYSPP's three-year program is relevant and oriented to the needs of clinicians who practice in a variety of settings. Classes meet in Manhattan on Monday evening for two 15-week seminars over three years.

NYSPP offers an additional two-year training program in psychoanalysis. This program is open to graduates of our psychotherapy program and to other equally qualified candidates.

NYSPP offers a two-year Child and Adolescent training program. This program blends contemporary psychoanalytic theories with practical interventions to support families and children facing difficult realities. Students study infant development research and ego psychology, with contributions of object relations and other modern psychoanalytic theory. We recognize the importance of knowledge within a multicultural environment such as New York City and emphasize the role of culture and ethnicity throughout our training. Practice courses offer the opportunity to discuss clinical case material in a supportive and confidential learning environment.

NYSPP maintains Clinical Services on Long Island, Westchester, New Jersey, and New York City. An annually published membership directory facilitates networking and referrals.

NYSPP has an active Alumni Association which sponsors major professional meetings open to the public. It also hosts smaller meetings for members and candidates, and special workshops and seminars for ongoing learning.
